

4.1 Collection of data and sampling

Checklist

What you should know

By the end of this subtopic you should be able to:

- identify whether data is discrete or continuous
- recognise what factors can make a data source reliable or biased
- identify possible outliers in a data set
- list different types of random sampling
- understand how to create a sample that is representative of the population.

